BOARD BANTER

Breaking News

by Johannes Smits

We have just received information that Chicago has plans to expand the current bike lanes so that up to 50% of all commuters will be able to bike to work by the year 2015. This breaking news has come to us from an anonymous source close to the mayor!

Who am I kidding – that would never happen in Chicago, or for that matter in any major American city. But is this possible in a big modern city?

It all begins by encouraging commuters to bike to work. Not so much for exercise (which is an added benefit), and not only to keep cars out of the inner cities and to prevent pollution and traffic jams, but also to save money, for both the commuters and in the long run also for the city.

My personal experience comes from Copenhagen where I never had the need to own a car although my commute was around 20 miles. My means of transportation were my feet, bike, bus and/or train. The city has for many years encouraged the use of 'soft traffic' not only by closing roads in the center of the city to car traffic, but also by expanding the existing bike lanes and improving public transportation.

Although many commuters bike to work every day - no matter what the weather - an excellent public transportation system must complement the bike system. In Copenhagen the bus and subway system is easily accessible, relatively cheap and very reliable. It is driven by Copenhagen's traffic organization, which means that commuters easily can change from bus to train and back again.

The city has for many years had dedicated bike lanes, but it also has an equally impressive system of bus lanes with their own traffic lights that give busses first priority. This allows busses to pick up passengers and if necessary turn left without being stuck in traffic.

But the question is how is Copenhagen going to accomplish the 50% goal as mentioned before?

Below are a few current and future initiatives:

- Plans are in the works to create super bike lanes.

These lanes will be wider than normal in order to allow bikers to bike side by side and still have enough room for faster bikers to pass.

- These super bike lanes will have sections where bikers safely can pull over in order to talk on their cell phone or send text messages (texting is a big deal over there), and there will even be water and compressed air stations.

- Copenhagen has for several years experimented with 'green waves' for bikers on some of the major streets in Copenhagen. If bikers keep a certain speed, traffic lights will always be green allowing for a faster commute for bikers. Cars on the other hand might not be so lucky.

- One-way streets will be accessible for bikers in both directions using special two-way bike lanes. This would be a big advantage for bikers in any city.

- Copenhagen is divided by the ocean (tourists think it is a river), and several additional bike bridges are in

Wheelmen Assist Buffalo Grove Police at Annual Bike Rodeo

Four Wheelmen members volunteered to assist the Buffalo Grove P.D in their annual rodeo for child bicycle riders on Saturday May 21st. Their job was to check each child to make sure their helmets were being worn properly. Instructions for the parents in helmet fitting and adjusting were also provided. In addition, the children's bikes were registered and Village Cycle checked and tuned their bikes. The riders then had to ride through a course to display their competence in handling their bikes. Trophies were awarded to the best riders and other raffle gifts were awarded. The Wheelmen who volunteered were: Barb Barr, Marianne Kron, Ulfert Broockmann and Joe Beemster.

Attached is a photo of Barb Barr assisting a young rider. Although it rained for a while, some 50 children participated and enjoyed the event

TOUR DE FRANCE 2011

Running from Saturday July 2nd to Sunday July 24th, the 98th Tour de France will be made up of 21 stages and will cover a total distance of 3,471 kilometers.

These stages have the following profiles:

- 10 flat stages
- 6 mountain stages and 4 summit finishes
- 3 medium mountain stages
- 1 individual time-trial stage (41 km)
- 1 team time-trial stage (23 km)

Distinctive aspects of the race

- le Galibier climbed twice
- 2 rest days
- 23 level 2, 1 or highest level mountain passes or summit finishes
- no bonuses will be awarded during the intermediate sprints and stage finishes

Great moments in the history of the Tour

The line between insanity and genius is said to be a fine one, and in early 20th century France, anyone envisaging a near-

2,500-km-long cycle race across the country would have been widely viewed as unhinged. But that didn't stop Géo Lefèvre, a journalist with L'Auto magazine at the time, from proceeding with his inspired plan. His editor, Henri Desgrange, was bold enough to believe in the idea and to throw his backing behind the Tour de France. And so it was that, on 1 July 1903, sixty pioneers set out on their bicycles from Montgeron. After six mammoth stages (Nantes - Paris, 471 km!), only 21 "routiers", led by Maurice Garin, arrived at the end of this first epic.

Having provoked a mixture of astonishment and admiration, le Tour soon won over the sporting public and the roadside crowds swelled. The French people took to their hearts this unusual event which placed their towns, their countryside and, since 1910, even their mountains, in the spotlight.

Le Tour has always moved with the times. Like France as a whole, it benefited from the introduction of paid holidays from 1936; it has lived through wars, and then savored the "trente glorieuses" period of economic prosperity while enjoying the heydays of Coppi, Bobet, Anquetil and Poulidor; it has opened itself up to foreign countries with the onset of globalization, and now finds itself at the forefront of the debate on the malaise afflicting world sport in general. Over a hundred years after its inception, le Tour continues to gain strength from its experience.

the works that allow bikers to easily cross back and forth between new and old sections of the city - compared to cars that only have a few bridges from which to choose.

The existing bike paths to the suburbs will be expanded or improved in order to attract bike commuters from the suburbs.

Copenhagen will meet the 50%, perhaps not by 2015, but they will be pretty close. It is however refreshing to see that commuters are encouraged to use their bike, but it fits into the philosophy of the country where renewable energy has top priority and where most families only have one small car.

Let us all dream of a place where we can bike without worries and where there always is a tail wind.

SHARE YOUR STORIES

With the biking season underway we thought we should start early to gather information to be used for the banquet, which will be held on Sunday, November 13.

We always have the very popular gag gifts segment at the banquet which is always a huge hit. Here is where we need your help.

When out riding with your biking pals this season make a mental note of something you have found to be unusual, funny, strange, weird, etc. Examples; multiple flat tires, directional challenges, forgetting something at the start, during or after the ride, etc. We won't tell that you told on them.

Please put these stories in an email and send to Ella Shields at eshieldsbike@yahoo.com. We will gather them throughout the biking season and surprise you at the banquet. It's all in good fun so we'd appreciate everyone's input.
